

Recommendations of the 12th SPA Conference

Laurence A. Bannerman, president of the European Parking Association (EPA)

1. Parking management is strategic and central in enhancing and balancing the overall urban mobility system in order to ensure inner city accessibility.
2. A nationwide approach is necessary and in order to ensure that all cities use have the same understanding a national act on parking would be useful.
3. People are prepared to pay for parking when they know that a space will be available.
4. The way parking is organized and managed conditions the way a city works. Fast superficial solutions are guaranteed not to work, parking is not just about generating revenue, There is a complexity that involves all spheres of city life that need to be studied and implemented in the context of a sustainable systems approach.
